A CARBATH IN CARS.

MINITUMES, the Eric correspondent of the N., York Zimes, describes "a Sabbath in Eric" in rather newrons terms. He starts off thus:
"The rath rather comes. He starts off thus:
"The rath and term; the Strumen time, the soa bath; and daring the Strumen time, the sostrikes as brightly upon the wicked as upon the rightcome, giving a brighting dispect to the comtension of all whereserive its unobstructed rays, as write equal disregard of merit. He Sabbath the theme. We did not arrive at the Hall in time to hear the lecture's opening remarks, and lost his first definition of the subject of his lecture, which was "Great Men, and the Elements of Greatness." definition of the subject of his seeders, which was "Graat Men, and the Elements of Greatows."

Owing to the nitter want of facilities for report or in the Hall, we are obliged to rely almost whenly upon our recollection of his remarks, and rhall not attempt to give anything but an imperfect outline of them. As we entered the Hall, we understood the lecturer to say, that one true element of greatness was, a readment for action when the hour has struck, and when Providence has given the nummons. Joan of Are was referred to as as illustration. She believed here were ferred to as as illustration. She believed here were ferred to as as illustration. She believed here were ferred to as as illustration. She believed here were ferred to so as as illustration. She believed here were the content out inch had a see illustration. She believed here were the content out inch had a see illustration. She believed here were the content out inch had a see illustration. She believed here were the state of the wear pearly for one bows, and when, as she thought, the time for action had arrived, and God and her country salled her to the battle field, she was ready for the wirning gia. The hour for action comes to all, to every one; the hour when God calls, when angule law years of the country of the see hourself he surface and the believe of the see had pearly and the country in the bedd, the aarnest, and the persurveries, and when our destiny is to be decided. An Italian post had pistured the fable of Oceasion. She, a god dees, with tightly fitting robes, and looks shown elsewhere were the best was forever his but suffered onice to escape, she was forever his but suffered onice to escape, she was forever his but suffered onice to escape, these harpies bessess interportable companions.

The next element of True Greatness was patient, firm fidelity to the end, a willingness to take up either the erces or the erows, and persuant to take up either the erces or the erows, and persuant to take up either the erces or the erows, and persu then her tenent of frue transcess was per tient, firm fielity to the end, a willingness to take up either the cross or the crown, and per-severe until all should be finished. There was a fable of the young God Valds, the special fa-vorite and well beloved of ha mother. She besought of the Gods that they would render him invulnerable against dangers of every kind.— They all consented, save one, who secretly ex-cluded the mistletos wood from the charm. Then with unallocus ingenuity the fond mother was persoaded, inasmuch as her son was invulnera-ble, to stand him as a target for the amusement of the gods. Their shafts fell thick, but harmless around him, until the trescherous god launched his mistletoe arrow, when Valda fell to rise no his mixleton arrow, when Valds fell for ise no more. So it is with every man. All have one vulnerable point,—with some it is assessilly; with others, ambition; with others still, avarace; —and thus how few there are who escape the arrow of treachery, and remain true to the end for which they started, at all hazards, and at all costs.

All men who have a great work to secomplish All non who have a great work to accomplish must ascribe all for its sake, must devote their lives to its success. No divided attention would suffice—the goddess of the great exacted an engrossing devotion; no mained offeringe might be laid upon her alter. Nor was their work ever accomplished. They, even in death, might not ery out, "It is finished." Still, through sterally, their work went on. There was an ancient picture which represented this idea. It eleraity, their work went on. There was an anaient picture which represented this idea. It was a battle field; in the foraground lie heaps of dead, all ages and sezes, men, women, and children, piled in ghastly and gory heaps. But en either side, forms of slain warriors were springing up, as if salled by some mighty power to the skins. And there above, in the thus ether the Gods were seen rushing from every quarter of the heavens to join in the contest, which, finished on earth, was to be fought again in heaven battle is hever ended. Their visiony is never wos. However often they may seem to be year quished or to be victors, the battle must be fought again and again. They must die with pess in hand, as Heber did, and "with harness on their backs."
